Ultimate Frisbee team going to the top of the sport

by Cynthia O'Neill

Chris Jewell of Santee has never stopped the enjoyment she had of tossing the frisbee disk when she was a teenager growing up in Pennsylvania in the '70s.

She also took seriously the game of Ultimate Frisbee – a type of frisbee football.

Then, in 1983, she moved to San Diego – just for the summer to visit with some friends. During her visit, she saw an advertisement in the Reader about forming an ultimate team. She responded to the ad, and her life mushroomed into whirlwind activities.

"In joining the team, I ended up getting a whole team of friends. And I didn't see any reason to go back to Pennsylvania, because I'd found work, too, as a physical education teacher," said Jewell, who is now captain of SAFARI, the 8th ranked Women's Ultimate Team in the U.S.

The team qualified for the World Championship Ultimate Tournament in Vancouver, Canada from July 27 to Aug. 2.

Over 100 men's and women's teams from around the world will compete for the number one spot at this event. SAFARI qualified for the world tournament through regional and national tournaments last fall and spring 1997 seasons, including the San Diego Spring Fling.

In Vancouver, SAFARI will compete against women's teams from Finland, Canada, Sweden, Japan, Germany, New Zealand and Australia, as well as seven other U.S. teams.

SAFARI has 20 women on its roster. Jewell has led the team to victory at several tournaments over the years.

She said that she is really excited about the team this year, adding that we have the perfect combination of veterans who have the skill and knowledge and new players who have the speed and agility to take us to the top. We have worked hard to incorporate complex plays into our strategy, and it's paying off.

"It can be quite grueling, but we all do it for fun. I do soak a lot of time into this, but I like the idea of getting exercise with a group of people. It's an honor for us to go to the national tournament – it's the Olympics of our sports," she said.

The non-contact sport blends elements of soccer, football and basketball where everyone is a quarterback and a receiver. It requires agility, speed and an easygoing temperament.

The team practice several times a week in Mission Bay where the players first do stretching exercises, then running several laps around before they do a drill of "cutting," "marking" and "throwing."

Cutting refers to a very fast player running one-on-one to prevent the receiver on the other team from catching a disc. Marking is blocking a player trying to throw the disc.

One of the ways to throw the disc is called the sidearm throw, in which the player places two or three fingers directly under the lip of the disc, with the thumb anchoring it. The player holds the disc at a slight angle away from the body and flicks her wrist.

"It's a tough throw to learn – it took me three months. But I had to learn it because when a player tries to pitch a disk past the defender, she can't make the underhand toss to get it to curve around the defender," said Jewell.

"The game doesn't stop until somebody scores or calls time out," explained Jewell.

A game can go up to 17 points, and can last from 1 1/2 to three hours.

Padres establish Cindy Matters Fund for cancer research

by Joe Naiman

Lemon Grove resident Cindy Matters loved children and she loved the San Diego Padres. Now the Padres are continuing her legacy by establishing a "Cindy Matters Fund" for pediatric cancer research and is working in conjunction with hospitals and research scientists in her memory.

She attended San Miguel Elementary School, Christian Junior High and Christian High School before attending school in Los Angeles to become a chiropractic assistant.

The entire Matters family (Cindy has three sisters) had been patients of chiropractor Dr. Michael Madden, and Madden had an opening for an assistant after Cindy was certified.

Matters was well-liked by patients and staff and was involved in a clown ministry to visit sick children. But in February 1996, she experienced stomach pains. Doctors discovered a malignant tumor completely blocking her colon which had spread to her liver and lymph glands.

Cindy had stage 4 colon cancer, almost unheard of in a 27-year-old. Madden knew that Cindy was a Padres fan and called the Padres in the hopes that they would take action to cheer up his assistant. Mike Dee, the club's director of corporate development sensed sadness in Madden's voice and informed Michele Anderson in the Padres' community relations department.

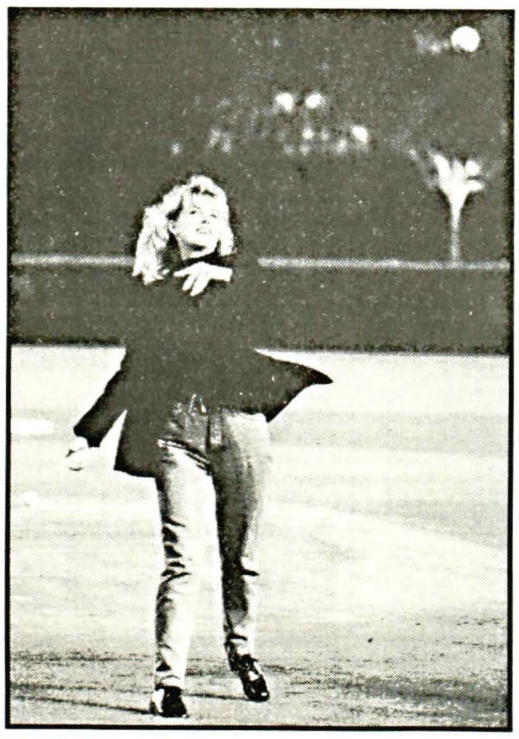
The Padres were in Spring Training at the time in Peoria, Ariz. Catcher Brad Ausmus was Cindy's favorite player, and Brad arranged to make an informal video presentation of the Padres' spring training facility.

"It's not a slick presentation at all, but that's what's so touching about it. It's just Brad ad-libbing," said Anderson. Through the video, Ausmus took Matters on a light-hearted tour of Spring Training. Other players joined the production and gave Matters messages of hope.

In April, the Padres invited Matters to throw out the first ball for Community Night, where she met Ausmus and Anderson in person. "It was a pretty touching thing," stated Anderson.

For one, Matters and Anderson are about the same age, as is Ausmus. Another reason was Matters' personality. Anderson said that she just has a great personality, so we really clicked and had fun and kept in touch

"People say that it really lifted her spirits," said Charles Steinberg, the Padres' director of community relations, on Cindy throwing out the first ball and meeting Ausmus in person.



Cindy Matters, in whose name a cancer fund was established by the Padres, had the opportunity to toss the first pitch on Community Night at the stadium.

When the Padres were in New York in August to play the Mets, they helped Matters fulfill a lifelong dream. They made arrangements for a hotel room for Cindy and some friends. Senator D'Amato gave the group a private tour of the Statue of Liberty. She also received tickets to a Broadway musical.

Matters, who had been a Padres fan since kindergarten and a member of the Junior Padres, was in high school when the Padres won the 1984 National League championship. She was unable to see the team's 1996 home playoff game against St. Louis, as she was too ill at the time.

Judy Matters, Cindy's mother, doubts that the Padres' division title was a dying Padre fan's last request. "She just enjoyed the Padres. I don't know if it was her last request. I think her last request was that she really wanted to be healed. She had her strong faith, and she was praying that she would be healed.".

The cancer spread to Cindy's lungs and she died Jan. 18 at the age of 28 at home.

Steinberg and Anderson attended the funeral. "It was clear that it was a family of deep, deep abiding faith," said Steinberg, and that it was clear that this young woman had a lot of friends.

When Larry Lucchino became the team's president in 1995, he had outlined three pillars in the team's community outreach: Padres Scholars, Little Padres Parks and children's health.

Lucchino himself had gone through cancer 10 years earlier, so cancer research was prominent in the Padres' outline.

Anderson had the idea of calling the program "Cindy Matters," noting the play on words. "All people matter, and we've got to do our best to take care of those with cancer," Steinberg remarked.

Dee used his capacity in corporate relations to contact Qualcomm and Glendale Federal. Qualcomm pledged $20,000 and Glendale Federal pledged a minimum of $10,000 with a donation for every Padres hit.

20th Anniversary Party bigger than July 1's

This is going to be even bigger than the party we had on July 1. Story boards are taking shape, and the reservations are rolling in. The committee is getting more excited each day that passes and the interest heats up. We even have businesses such as the tonsorial parlors talking up the idea. The Grove Pastry Shop has its cake all finished and on display at the bakery.

This is truly a celebration, not only of our incorporated city, but of the history of our community that goes way b ... There are many businesses that are still in operation and some in the same locations. Some have changed names, or more understandably have different managements, but the Lemon Groveness is still very present.

There is still time to sign up and to participate. However, July 7 was the deadline for reservations to the party. Those who got their names and RSVPs in by that date will get a special commemorative badge with the 20th Anniversary pin attached. One could call the City Hall at 464-6934 for further information.

The evening will start about 5 p.m. with refreshments and a dinner buffet that promises to be excellent. The "Walk of Fame" will be in the patio area of the Senior Center and it is expected that many businesses will be well represented. Our master of ceremonies will be the ever popular Jack Shelver, and he promises a full program of acknowledgement and nostalgia. There will also be music for dancing, and, if past Lemon Grove parties have been any precedent, it will be a fun time for all.

The committee is sincerely trying to get as many of the old timers that were involved in our incorporation, failed as well as the fourth and successful one, to attend. We have commitments from Karen Thomson Huff, our former city clerk/treasurer. She and husband Dick will be coming from Hawaii. The Bob Guests, an original supporter, big time, will be here from Arizona. We are hoping that all of the locals so involved in our early cityhood will be coming also.

Lemon Grove is 20 years old and it is alive and well. There are dog years, and there are human years, but it would seem that a city must have a special span of growth and maturity that is all it's own. Our town has matured and progressed in some ways that put us on a par with some of the much older municipalities near by. In some ways we are even better despite our being barely out of our teens. Let us celebrate all that is fine and good on July 19. Meet us at 8235 Mt. Vernon St., the Lemon Grove Senior Center, and raise a toast of Lemon-ade ... What else?

Interactive computers to enhance enjoyment of stadium sports

by Greg Eichelberger

An interactive computer system that utilizes fiber-optic technology to enhance fans' enjoyment of any given sporting event is currently being installed at the stadium.

The system allow users to view the game from a variety of camera angles and to access team and/or players' statistics, batter/pitcher matchups, hit and pitch charts and team standings, or any other information that may be relevant.

It also has the potential to be used either at stadiums or in other public settings, such as sports bars, among other places.

For those who think the so-called information superhighway has crept into just about every aspect of our lives, here's one more example to chew on for a while, and one of East County's own is partially responsible.

While many may view this "intrusion" as a negative, it really is an additional way to enjoy a sport that, well, for lack of a better term, can be downright boring, at times.

John Beaver, a Lakeside resident since moving there with his wife, Tisha, from the San Francisco Bay area in March, is one of a handful of computer consultants in charge of installing about 700 such devices in certain seats at Jack Murphy/QualComm Stadium, the first of its kind in the U.S.

Beaver said, "Currently, it's a prototype of a potential service for baseball fans. A computer screen at the fan's seat has touch-operated buttons."

This project is being developed by the Erbes Development Group, a computer services consulting company.

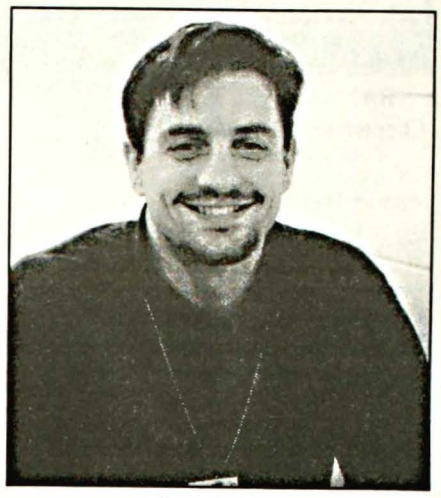
Padres owner John Moores, who built his personal fortune on designing software, is 100 percent behind this concept, claiming that the 700-odd seats will grow over the years to thousands, and that more and more Major League stadiums across the country will soon adopt this technology.

And, lest one may think that these are going to be available to only the hoi polloi who shell out 125 bucks for the dugout seats, Beaver assures the regular fans who sit in loge, view or field seats will also have access to the infernal machines.

Growing up in Oklahoma (the son of Everett and Janelle) and earned a Bachelor's degree in Computer Science at Oklahoma State University.

Beaver honed his technological skills along with just the right mixture of sports fanaticism.

"I love baseball, hunting, baseball, fishing, baseball, softball and baseball," he joked, "so it's ironic that I was chosen for this particular task."



John Beaver

The installation will continue throughout the season, with the first prototypes coming on line shortly.

As for future plans, Beaver will keep doing his work, enjoying the Padres, staying happy, healthy and looking forward to raising children one day.

But for now, he will concentrate on one difficult project at a time.

Sports Beat
with Greg Eichelberger

Hello again. Try as I might, I just can't seem to get through a week without having to comment on something in the sports world. And I guess you don't have to be Dr. Werner von Braun to figure out what's bugging me this time.

Just when I thought that the horribly stupid Mike Tyson (and the sport of boxing, for that matter) couldn't get any lower, this uncaged animal decides to gnaw Evander Holyfield's ears the same way a starving hyena would chew on the rotting parts of a week-dead Thompson's gazelle. Unfortunately, this was in front of millions of (pay-per-view) onlookers, who, despite what they've seen in the past from pugilism, were shocked to the core.

It doesn't surprise me, though. This is the same Mike Tyson who, at 12 years of age, would offer to help old ladies carry their groceries, then, when they were out of public view, smash them in the face and steal their money. But what else could we expect from an immoral, ignorant, vicious, convicted rapist with a tattoo of Chairman Mao on his arm, though?

Let's face it, Tyson, who has somehow made the evolutionary jump to walking upright, is the only person in the world that makes Don King look good. However, after his 18-month suspension, I fear that "Iron Bite" will be an even bigger draw, thanks to idiotic, gullible boxing fans.

Now on to other matters. It seems that venerable Union-Tribune scribbler Bill Center has taken upon himself to start dabbling into the affairs of our own beloved (but never willing to advertise with us) Cajon Speedway. Bill, take my advice. Stick to playing backup to Tom Krasovic, and leave the motor sports to Joe Naiman, a man, who although has never set foot in any vehicle more powerful than a 1974 Vega, still writes with some amount of passion about the activity.

The National Adult Baseball Association played a few tournament games at West Hills and Helix High schools last week, but I didn't get any of the results.

If there are any East County members of "The Sons of the Splendid Splinter," (the official Ted Williams fan club), their next meeting will be Thursday evening (6:30) at the Hall of Champions in Balboa Park. Just thought you'd like to know.

Still on the baseball topic, Forum Publications was again on hand as the Padres made another six-player deal last week, shipping Greg Vaughn and a couple of minor leaguers to the Yankees for pitcher Kenny Rogers (not the "Gambler" who works for the Barona Casino), former Dodger Mariano Duncan and another busher. One thing's for sure, though, this deal meant that Rickey Henderson is finally an everyday player. All of that is moot since George Steinbrenner has nipped the trade in the bud. Seems that Vaughn (as well as Rogers) has had rotator cuff surgery recently, and the felonious Yankee owner doesn't want our damaged goods. More on this soap opera later, friends.

Speaking of the Pads, El Cajon resident and National League umpire, Paul Runge, the son of Ed, is working in his final season, and has breezed through here twice in the last month. As soon as I can, I'll sit down and discuss his thoughts of leaving the game after almost 30 years.

Congratulations to Tony Gwynn, Ken Caminiti and Bruce Bochy for their selection to this year's All-Star Game, which will take place in Cleveland.

While at last week's games against the Mariners and Dodgers, I was able to talk with political commentator George F. Will (Newsweek, ABC's "This Week") about his desire to become the next commissioner of baseball. The owners aren't about to relinquish their hold on the game by giving all of the power to one man. He also indicated that current "acting" commish, Bud Selig, still wants the job.

But I also want to put you in your place – right here in this column! So, if you have news I can use, be it pee-wee or professional, as long as it has (some kind of) a local angle, call me at 390-7103, and I'll do the rest. In the meantime, have a great sports week.

Letter to the Editor

I'd vote 'em out

The San Diego Off-Road Coalition is extremely disappointed that the mayor of Santee and the Santee City Council would approve a resolution officially opposing an off-highway vehicle (OHV) recreation park in Slaughterhouse Canyon before having had an opportunity to see even a tentative plan for the park.

To their credit, they did invite the California Off-Highway Motor Vehicle Recreation (OHMVR) Division to send a staff member down to make a presentation on the park.

However, the division declined to do so because the plans are still too undefined at present. Under considerable pressure from Lakeside residents, the division staff did make a presentation to the Lakeside Community Planning Group in May, and received heavy criticism for not showing sufficient details.

The deputy director of the division wisely decided not to make the same mistake again in Santee. Details are simply not yet available pending further study. At the appropriate stage in the process, there will be ample opportunity for public input.

Public comments in opposition to the park at the June 25 Santee City Council meeting came from three or four Eucalyptus Hills (Lakeside) residents and only one resident of Santee.

Those commenting in favor of the park asked only for the reasonable course of deferring an official position on the park until details become available.

In spite of this, the decision was made to oppose the park without any significant public comment from Santee residents in opposition, and without knowledge of where the park boundaries might be or how far from Santee the nearest trail within the park might be located. This resolution obviously does not reflect the opinion of the citizens of Santee.

I find it sadly ironic that Santee, the home of many national motorcycle champions, would oppose an OHV park so desperately needed by its citizens and those of the surrounding areas.

As an OHV recreation enthusiast, I am disappointed by this decision. But were I a voter living in Santee, approximately 3,000 of whom are off-roaders, I would be incensed that my elected officials would choose to make any important decision without benefit of the facts or significant input from their constituents.
